Fred A. Fenster resolves complex business disputes for a diverse cross-section of clients, ranging from multinational corporations to private individuals and such sports luminaries as Pete Rose, Pete Sampras, Keyshawn Johnson, Troy Polamalu, Lindsay Davenport and Lynn Swann.

Although litigation has been the cornerstone of Fred's practice, he also represents clients in arbitration, mediation and other alternative dispute resolution proceedings. Fred has successfully tried over 100 cases involving business contracts, unfair competition, trade disparagement, misappropriation of trade secrets and interference with advantageous business relationships. He also has significant expertise in business torts, fraud, partnership and corporate dissolutions, defamation, injunctive relief and various employment matters such as wrongful termination and non-competition covenants.

Fred is an Adjunct Professor of Law at the University of Southern California and a Member of the Board of Editors of California Pretrial Practice & Forms which gives him a unique perspective on the law and timely insight on issues that may pivotally impact the manner in which a case should be handled from pretrial through trial.

Representative Matters

- Along with Pierce O'Donnell, Fred represented a foundation which had funded a pathbreaking, world-renowned biorepository for liver tissues located for a decade at the California Pacific Medical Center (CPMC) in San Francisco. Problems developed, and three years ago, CPMC sent a notice of eviction that threatened the existence of the biorepository. The foundation hired Greenberg Glusker, which filed a lawsuit on its behalf to prevent the ruination of the biorepository. Within three days, CPMC asked to stay the litigation and enter into settlement discussions. Three years later, the parties finally entered into a settlement favorable to the foundation. The liver repository was saved and is being relocated at the University of California at San Francisco Medical Center. Technical Training Foundation v. California Pacific Medical Center (San Francisco County Superior Court; judge) (2026)
